GOLD RESERVE'S DECLINE

One Cent West

It Causes Treasury Officials a Good Deal of Anxiety.

ITS EFFECT UPON EUROPE

Apprehension Felt Lest Foreign Holders of American Bonds Become Frightened and Dump Their Secorities Upon the Market-This Would Cause Terrible Depression in Prices.

the utmost apprehension exists among officials of the Tresury Department because of the steadily decreasing gold reserve.

This feeling of alarm is not produced by reason of the belief that the Morgan-Beimont-Rothschild syndicate will abrogate their agreement to protect the Treasury until the first of October, and their verbal promise, given to the President seven months ago, that the gold reserve would be maintained at the legal limit of $100,000,000 after that date until the convening of Congress, when an opportunity will be afforded for remedia; legislation.

The dismay among government officials is caused by the effect the decline in the gold reserve will have upon the financial centers of Europe.

FRIGHTEN FOREIGN BOND HOLDERS. It is held that the present shortage of three millions, which is daily being increased, by the syndicate, will have the effect of frightening the holders of American securi-ties abroad and is likely at any time to bring about a wholecale dumping of these securities in the New York market. This would naturally be followed by an enermous depression in prices and accompanies by the withdrawal of millions of dollars in gold for the purpose of paying foreign investors frightened into sacrificing their holdings by eason of a falling gold reserve.

Much relief has been expected to follow the movement of the cotton crop, but the receipts of gold from this source would by no means offset the exports rendered neces sary by reason of the holders of American securities becoming panic stricken.

As a consequence of such a condition there would be a general depression of business, which would only add to the serious charac-ter of the situation.

The feeling of apprehension is not at this time caused by any real or immediate danger, but on account of the uncertainty that exists concerning the future. The question frequently arises: If the syndicate fulfills its solemn promise to main-tain the reserve until the first of October and then ignores its verbal promise to continue their protection until the assembling of Congress, what will be the result? There is only one answer to the query, and that is to the effect that another sale of bonds would be unavoidable. It is a certainty that the reserve could not sgain reach as low a point as heretofore with-out more disastrous results following, and the issue of bonds must be made with more promptness and less delay.

It is hourly expected that the syndicate will deposit three or four million dollars and bring the reserve to the legal limit, but each day of delay only increases the possibility of a panic being started among the holders in Europe of American securi-ties. This procrastination is the feature of the situation which produces anxiety among officials of the Treasury Depart ment. The Treasury gold reserve is officially stated at $97.612,606, subject to an addition of $1,900,000, not yet taken up in Treasurer's books.
